END OF THE LONG, LONG TRAIL TODAY

BY WILL STEVENS JR.

The Marauding Moragans reach the end of that long, long trail today, and only the gods can tell whether that last mile will be filled with laughter or with tears.

For many of the Gaels, it will be only a temporary armistice, a rest from the grid-iron wars and the Coast to Coast search for football plunder. But for twenty-one of them, it is the end of the trail, the last battle in their last campaign, the final chapter in three drama-packed years that have sent them up to the firing line in struggles that have captured the fancy of the entire nation.

Thousands of boys each year play their final game of intercollegiate football, and while a student body, an alumni association, or those who follow them in the newspapers may regret their passing from the football picture, there is always a new band of riders to take their place, new lines to tear open the gaping holes, new backs to slither and slash and rip through those holes.

There has been something different, though, about this college generation of St. Mary's football men, playing their final game today. Drama and color and romance were theirs from their first battle, and since that day back in September, in 1931, when they astounded the football world by triumphing over Southern California, 13 to 7, they have built among themselves an esprit d' corps that one finds only in the story books.

These boys have not been so many football players, working side by side, but they have been comrades. Countless nights they have spent in their rooms, fighting the battles of the morrow. Never was it another football game. Always it was a contest in which victory would bring St. Mary's higher, command more respect for the little Christian Brother school. Others, years and years ago, had built the foundation for the traditions of Harvard, or Princeton, or California, or Notre Dame. Not so with these boys. They were blazing the way themselves for others, years and years from now. They had no ghosts to follow—no Gipps, nor Bakers nor Eichenlaubs nor Mohardts nor Eckersalls. They were the ghosts that others would follow.

To fight with the sons of the Red and Blue has been a sacred trust. Only here can be found the secret of those astounding triumphs they have rolled up over a period of three years—when the skies were blue, and the sun a blazing red.

Here is the honor roll:

Harold Johnson, guard	Bill Carpenter, guard
Walter Minogue, guard	Mervyn Yates, center
Charles Heinbockel, end	Sid Ahern, quarter

Hugh Gerardin, guard

Southern Methodist brings another sensational team to face the Gaels this afternoon. Up to White Plains against the Army, down to Annapolis to battle the Middies, into South Bend to challenge Notre Dame at its best—across the land have these Methodist teams passed their way into the nation's headlines, and today, they will play with all the daring that has characterized them in the past.

Playing behind a steady line, and leading the offensive onslaught will be four sophomores—all four reputed to be the equal of the Coast's fanciest sharpshooters. Conjure up in your imagination a backfield that includes U. C. L. A.'s Frankovich at quarter, Pacific's Tom Wilson at left half, Washington State's Sarboe at right half, St. Mary's George Wilson at fullback—and you have a general idea of what may happen this afternoon when the Mustangs begin to throw that pigskin down the field.

And then take a few Coast wingmen—Stanford's Al Norgard, Washington's Bill Smith, St. Mary's Brothers Canrinus, Oregon's Pozzo—and you begin to understand what Edward Patrick Madigan and his boys are likely to face today.

Ace of the Mustang sharpshooters—if one could be selected from the five or six that Coach Ray Morrison may use—is Bobby Wilson, tall, like St. Mary's Wilson; but unlike St. Mary's Wilson, light—weighing only 150 pounds. When Bobby winds up, comes the report from Dallas, he can hit a dime with that pigskin, and give the boys a nickel change. But Bobby is dangerous not only on the tossing end of a forward pass.

Six times, against six different teams in the Southwestern Conference, Wilson has come through with long, twisting touchdown runs. Today, against the only team in the country that could stop U. S. C.'s "Cotton" Warburton cold, Bobby Wilson hopes to break loose and bring his total to seven, or eight, or nine.

Over at right half for the Mustangs will be Jimmy "Wrecker" Russell, another forward pass artist, and one of the best ball-carriers in the Southwest. Harry Schuford at quarter is a kicking, passing, running threat, and Robby Turner, the "Weatherford Wonder," gives S. M. U. a passing and plunging fullback to complete the backfield.

Morrison will parade a host of other backfield men today, of course, among whom will be Shelley Burt, who caused so much havoc with Gael defenses two years ago; "Jackarack" Seagraves, six foot three, 195 pound "dark horse" sophomore of the Mustang attack; Jimmy Woodward, Charley Chinn, and "Jakie" Gore. They're all good, and more important to the cause of Southern Methodist, all of them can pass.

Edward Patrick Madigan banks his hopes of victory today on a giant line, the field generalship of Sid Ahern at quarter, the kicking, passing, and running strength he has in George Wilson and Allan Nichelini, and the plunging of Gord Partee at fullback.

For the last time, that 214 pound line of George Canrinus, Carl Jorgensen, Gilbert, Yates, Elduyan, Yezerski, Fred Canrinus will unloose its fury against the enemy. Against Southern California, Fordham in New York, and U. C. L. A. in Los Angeles, that big blue line rose to the heights. Playing together for the last time, it would seem to be in the cards that those seven will come through with their greatest game of the year this afternoon.

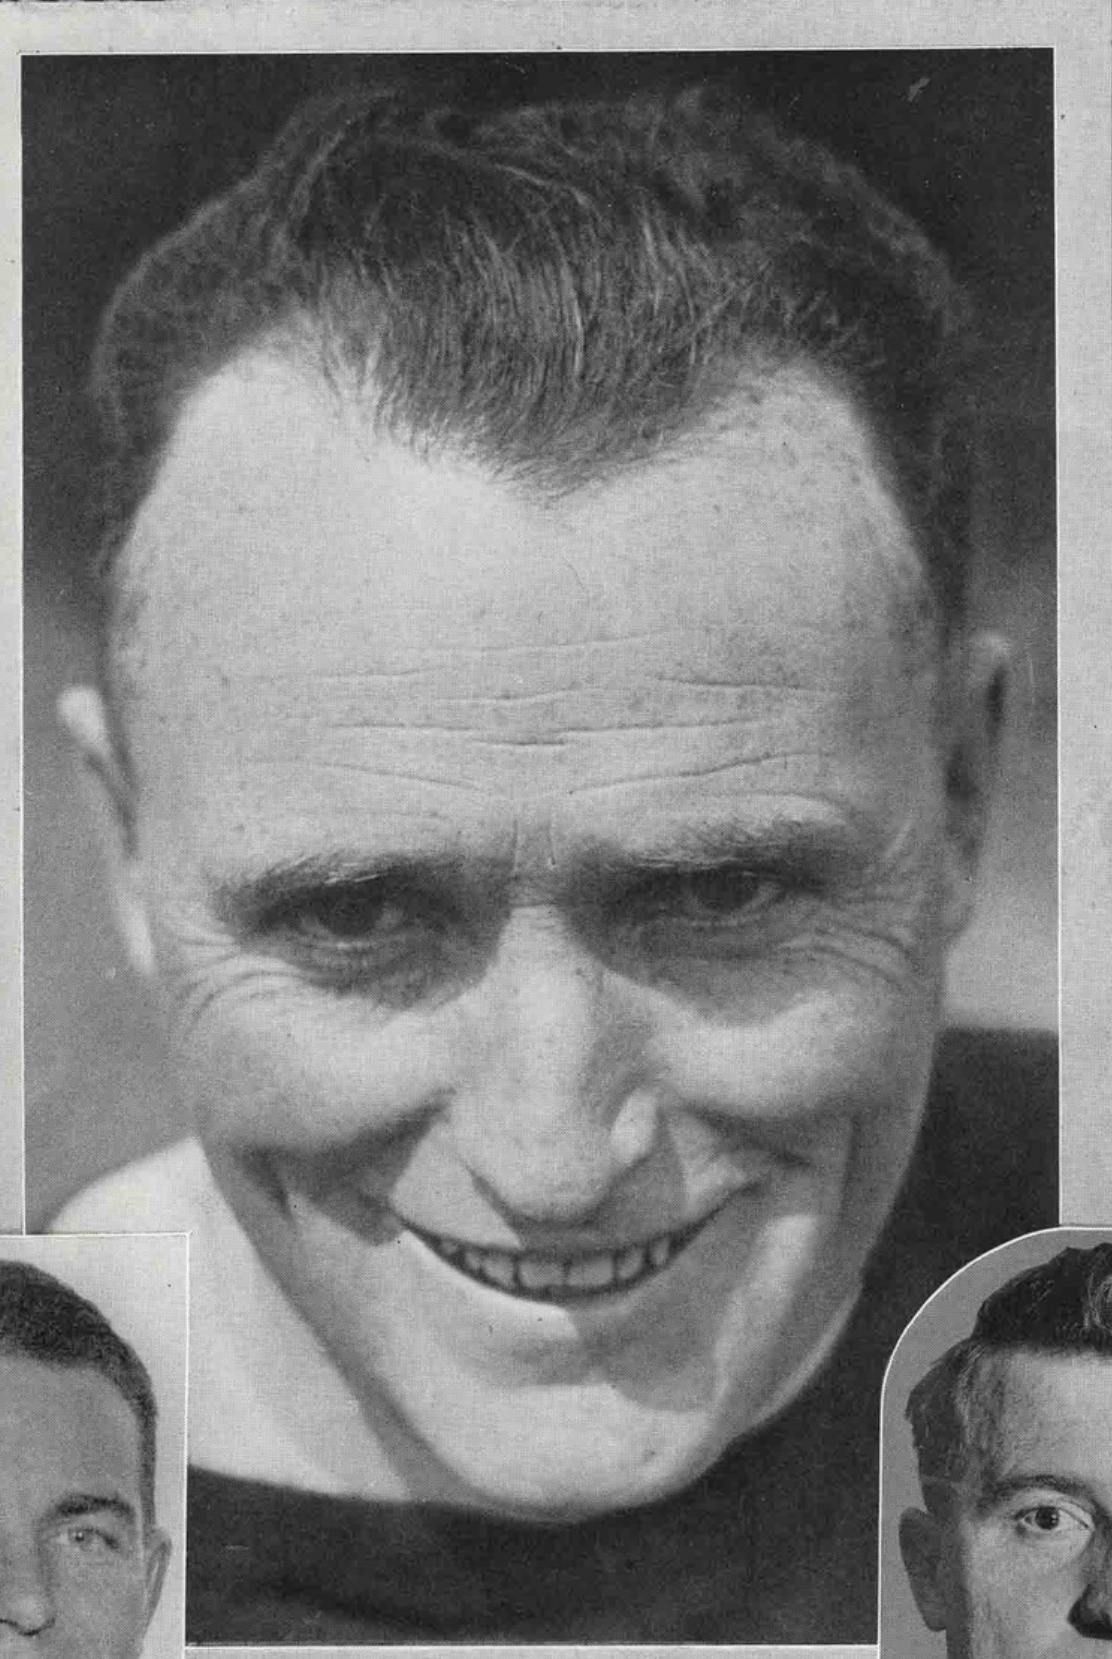

Madigan may launch a smashing running attack against the Mustangs, in which Wilson, Nichelini, and Partee would carry the heavy assignments. Or the old Maestro of the Moragans may gamble, and attempt to match S. M. U. pass for pass.

Should that happen it would mean George "Ice-House" Wilson firing away, and later in the struggle, Harry "The Horse" Mattos, Moraga's brilliant sophomore backfield prospect. Herb Schreiber, too, would be called upon to pass, and perhaps even Ahern, Nichelini, and Partee.

The St. Mary's - Southern Methodist contest two years ago is down in the books as one of the Far West's all-time sensational battles. With St. Mary's set to play its greatest football of the year, and Southern Methodist confident it can upset the Gaels, another thrill-a-minute game seems inevitable.

1934's ALL-AMERICANS

Each year the countless selectors of All-America teams descend upon an unsuspecting public with their choices, many of whom they never have seen in action, nor will they ever see them. A precious few—a very precious few—of these All-America teams really mean something, or, perhaps one should say, mean as much as any All-America team can mean.

But it is a reckless proposition at best, and more often than not, men who should be named are left unsung, while others fortunate enough to ride the ballyhoo are carried into the selections on the strength of ballyhoo alone. In those few cases where ballyhoo is entirely disregarded, the bogey of personal prejudice is likely to enter, with the result that boys are left off, when by every right, they belonged to the select few.

With football played from East to West, from North to South, it is naturally impossible for one man to watch all the teams. As a result, "observers" are selected in various sections of the country by one man, and these "observers" send in the names of All-America prospects from their own section. These are gathered together, some are arbitrarily sloshed aside and the final eleven choices are made.

If Bill Jones, for instance, is selected by an "observer" in the South, big enough to lay aside whatever personal prejudice he may have for Bill Jones, or Bill Jones' alma mater, Jones still must face the prospect of "landing" against a boy from the East, or West, who has played with a team constantly in the headlines. Some football players, not half as capable as others in their same position, are yet colorful, make excellent copy, and have thousands upon thousands of words written about them.

If the ability of Jones and one of these others is a standoff—Jones is shuffled aside.

Typical of the strange things that may happen in this All-America selecting business is the case of two St. Mary's tackles, Carl Jorgensen and John Yezer-ski, both of whom will be at the regular tackle positions for St. Mary's this afternoon.

Jorgensen, from his sophomore days, has been a great tackle. There have been times, during the past three years, when he has slowed down—but certainly Carl Jorgensen could play All-America football when he wanted to, and nine times out of ten, that is the way he felt.

Jorgensen this year was named on the New York Sun's All-America, little publicized, but really one of the most accurate and fairest of them all, insofar as it is possible to be accurate and fair.

John Yezer-ski, a sophomore this year, has played brilliantly from the start. Yezer-ski was named on none of the Sun's All-America teams. But Yezer-ski was named on the Newspaper Enterprise Association All-America, and Jorgensen was not even mentioned!

Fred Canrinus, named by his own coach as "the greatest end the Far West has seen since Brick Muller," a wingman lauded by opposing players and coaches alike, as well as newspapermen, somehow or other makes none of the countless All-America selections, nor does Allan Nichelini, called by so conservative a critic as Howard Jones, "the greatest halfback I have seen all year." Ask any Western coach, "who, of all the backs on the Coast, would you rather have?" and the answer comes, "Nichelini of St. Mary's." And yet the "Big Nick" goes a begging. "Ice-House" Wilson is another typical case. In every comparison that has appeared this year, he has been ranked over Army's Jack Buckler. And yet, when the final selections are made, Buckler is named.

The same might be said for many boys in the West—Larry Siemering of U. S. F., Bill Smith of Washington, Phil Sarboe of Washington State, Morse of Oregon.

It's quite a mess—but what a lot of fun while it lasts!

Next year will see a wild scramble, at least insofar as the Coast is concerned, for an All-American backfield berth. Tons of publicity will be cut loose for Bobby Grayson, Stanford's great sophomore back; "Cotton" Warburton of U. S. C., Norman "Red" Franklin of Oregon State, George "Ice-House" Wilson, or Allan Nichelini of St. Mary's, and Arleigh Williams of California.

Warburton made it this year, Grayson was slowed down during the season by injuries, Wilson knocked at the door, together with Franklin, Williams was not used consistently.

Of the linemen, biggest "cinch" of them all looms as John Yezer-ski, Moraga's six foot four, 234 pound giant, as fast as he is big.

SPORT SHOTS

You haven't heard a word about them yet, and you won't, if "Slip" Madigan can help it. It will leak out, sooner or later, of course, and then the old Maestro of the Moragans will say, "well, yes, they're fair country ball players—fair."

But over in Moraga's rolling foothills, working all year against the varsity, has been a backfield that eventually may reach the heights of Notre Dame's immortal Four Horsemen. All four are sprinters, having won California interscholastic championships during their prep school days. They average little more than 170 pounds, but each one of them hits with the driving force of a battering ram. One of them is among the school's one-two-three honor students, and in his freshman days, was hailed as the smartest frosh quarterback in Red and Blue history. Two of them, right now, are considered the passing equal of "Red" Schefflin, Charley Baird, or George Wilson. One of them can kick sixty yards consistently. All season they have worked together, but have not competed against intercollegiate competition.

Members of third, fourth, or fifth teams, the four finally drifted together into the same backfield late in the season. They clicked immediately—and have continued to click. They were green, but slowly and surely the rough spots were polished off.

"A coach's dream come true," Madigan has said more than once, watching them.

Even off the field, they are inseparable companions. Next year they may be one of the nation's football sensations.

In the rush to acclaim the Gilberts, Yezer-skis, Jorgensens, Brothers Canrinus and the others, many have overlooked Nebb Elduyan, sophomore right guard who came through so beautifully for the Gaels when he was needed most. Elduyan should be one of the finest guards on the Coast next season.

* * * *

St. Mary's has sent plays at some of the Coast's best tackles—Lutz of California, Erskine of U. S. C., Eagle of Oregon—but when it came time to name their All-Opponent team, the Gaels picked an unheralded, unsung lineman from the University of Nevada—Cecil Stowell—as the most capable tackle they have played against during the season. They ranked Stowell far above Uzdavinis, once a Fordham All-American hope. Fred Canrinus changed their mind about that.
